Nova Southeastern University College of Osteopathic Medicine

Established in 1979, Nova Southeastern University College of Osteopathic Medicine (NSU-COM) accepted its first class in 1981. NSU-COM is currently ranked as the 11th largest medical school and the 4th largest osteopathic medical school in the nation. For more information about NSU-COM, please visit <http://medicinenoVA.edu>. NSU is the largest independent not-for-profit institution of higher education in the Southeast and the 6th largest nationally.

Center for Bioterrorism and All-Hazards Preparedness

NSU College of Osteopathic Medicine's Center for Bioterrorism and All-Hazards Preparedness (CBAP), is a national center focused on interdisciplinary training, information dissemination, and technical assistance related to all-hazards preparedness in a global society. CBAP is quickly rising to preeminence and has evolved into a national hub, providing all-hazards training and education throughout the nation to health and school professionals, students, and the public. As one of only seven national centers of its kind, CBAP is committed to developing a national model for all-hazards preparedness training, which includes all emergencies as well as safety on college campuses. Programs are presented online, on CD, and live.
