Emily joined the Office of Career Development in March 2014 as a full time Career Adviser. As a member of the advising staff, Emily works with current students and alumni at the undergraduate, graduate, and professional levels to ensure that each individual is supported in a variety of ways throughout their career exploration and planning process.

Emily is a native of New England, where she grew up and attended the University of Rhode Island, earning a Bachelor of Arts in Communication Studies with a focus in Interpersonal Communication and a minor in Psychology. Throughout her undergraduate career, Emily explored her interest in working with diverse populations by taking courses such as multicultural psychology and basic American Sign Language, as well as becoming involved in various community organizations. She continues to fulfill her passion for community involvement by working with a local non-profit agency that assists unemployed Veterans with the transition to civilian employment.

Prior to joining the Office of Career Development, Emily has held roles in both Career Advisement and Human Resources/University Recruiting, allowing her to bring a unique, blended perspective to her advising sessions with students. This experience, coupled with her own experience as a student, has led to a strong interest in helping students to explore a wide array of majors and career paths to find a great fit in terms of interests, skills, working styles and values. Outside the office, you can find Emily exploring her creative side through baking, writing and photography, as well as enjoying time spent outdoors, exploring the unique environment of South Florida.
