Request an article through interlibrary loan

Check first to be sure that the journal is not available in full text online under “Electronic Books and Journals.” Then click here for “Request an Interlibrary Loan.”

When you fill out the interlibrary loan request form and submit it, the request is sent directly to our Interlibrary Loan/Document Delivery Department. You must complete all the required fields or the form will not be sent.

ILL staff then do one of two things. If we own the print version of the journal you have requested, they will pull the issue off the shelf, scan in the article and send it to you. If we do not own the journal issue, they will request it from another library.

The time involved in this process can be as little as two hours or as much as several days, depending on where we have to borrow the title. Thanks to a new system that was implemented in October of this year, the usual time lapse from request to fulfillment is less than 24 hours.

The process is easy to use. You will receive an email telling you that your article is available. There will be a link for you to access and a PIN (personal identification number) for you to use to retrieve the article. You will have 10 days to retrieve the article before it is removed. You can access it up to 5 times. This gives you the opportunity to save it on your hard drive or disk, print it, or just read it online. If for any reason this is not enough time, or if you have trouble accessing the article, instructions are given for obtaining help.
