

The World: A Never-Ending Saga

The world is like a television
And we are her viewers
She suffocates us in her media
All while we lay back and consume her entertainment

Injustice after injustice
Mass killings and genocides
Climate crises and natural disasters
We watch

War and crime
Poverty and homelessness
Disease and famine
We watch

They tell us in school, "Stand up for what's right"
"Remember the Holocaust, let it inspire you to never turn a blind eye"
Yet the world continues to cultivate horror after horror, and again and again
We watch

We watch until the world reaches her hand through our screen
A hand coated in the blood and death and evil of humanity
A hand that intends to choke us with the same suffocating evil it has to billions prior They watch

They watch just as we did

They watch as we slowly wither away from her force

They watch as we gasp for air as the world suffocates us with her wrath

They watch as we perish to the same evils that we watched others fall to

For how long will we watch?

How long will we wait to pull the plug on the world's never-ending sequel of death and destruction?

For there is only one way to shoot the finale of a never-ending saga

Cut the cameras, unplug the TV, and act against her rageful conquest of the human race

Have we not watched long enough?

Have we not read enough history books to predict the next episode?

Will we do as much as lift a finger?

Or will we do as our parents, grandparents, and every generation prior has done?

How many more times will we turn our heads?

How many more hours will we watch?
